I have the follow critique regarding the currently implemented design:

Because the name (aka dashboard) button and logout button are visually combined into one tab, I got the impression (especially when hovering over it) that no matter where I click on the tab, it will have the same effect. In fact, when I click on the logout button, the dashboard view becomes active and then I got logged out after a while.

Personally I don't see why we need to combine both in one tab, in my opinion this only cause confusion.

I suggest that

- we have two separate tabs, one for the dashboard and one for the logout
- both tabs are highlighted separately on mouse over
- logout should not be done by XHREF but rather by a direct link in order to get a direct feedback on the button click
- the fadein-time should be shorter than currently (feels like about 1 second)

Where can I test / see that?

<http://latest.phoenix.demo.typo3.org/> << Unusable.

Who mad that? Why is it still like that? Who can fix that? :)

A Tab ONLY! for Logout is a Nogo.

Maybe we need to find a new solution there.

First I like to taste it and see if it got the right UX.
