Subject:	After #23766: Wrong text "Content Element: disable" - better: "Hide CE"
Description
The wording is not ideal here: When the option is clicked, the element can still be edited in the backend. So it is not disabled. What you mean is "Hide Content Element". The text should be changed accordingly. (issue imported from #M16068)

History

We discussed that already during the T3UXW09 and decided to do it this way, since this checkbox is not about the backend, but about the frontend.

The element actually is not "hidden" (display:none) but completely removed from the HTML output, thus the naming "disable".

The tab label is about the topic "General visibility", the checkbox group label then asks "Content Element?" and the checkbox label answers "Disable!"

We tried to follow this rule - Topic => Question => Action - for almost any checkbox by using verbs for the actions that are triggered by activated checkboxes.

| Topic => Question => Action

Sounds good! This should be documented somewhere. Not that the next extension developer breaks this useful logic, because he does not recognize it.

Can this one be closed?

Can you still make sure that this gets documented somewhere?

Preferably in one of the official core manuals.

That would be great!
