Subject: TYPO3 Security Framework should not take unexisting roles into account
Description
Now the Security Framework uses all roles available in the tokens. When a role is not configured in the Policy.yaml this should not have effect. For example if you now create a new Phoenix user with the role 'User' the backend gives an 'Access denied!' because the security framework does not know the role User. Expected behavior: just ignore the users role?

[BUGFIX] Exceeding roles of accounts are now ignored

If an account had one ore more roles which were not defined in a policy, access was denied to this account because the role could not be matched. It is, however, more practical to simply ignore exceeding roles.

This patch makes sure that getRoles() only considers roles of the active tokens which really exist in one of the policies.
