Subject:	Catch PDO exceptions to avoid outputting database information in exception backtrace
Description

If the PDO connection throws an exception, it's not catched by FLOW3, which leads to a debug backtrace showing the calls to the PDO calls revealing the database information. Even though this only happens in Production context, I still believe that it should not be shown there.

I've created a patch and provided before and after screenshots. I have also testet that normal sql exceptions are not catching by this, e.g. a missing table.

[FEATURE] Catch PDOExceptions to prevent database information in debug backtrace

Add catching of \PDOExceptions to the Doctrine Query class, and output the exception message & code, but prevent the debug backtrace leading up to it, since it contains the database information in the method calls.
