Subject:	HTML editor displays dynamically inserted content rather than the actual node's
Description	if you have an HTML content element which inner content is changed by some client side JavaScript, the HTML editor shows this changed content rather than the background node's. You can say, the HTML editor always shows the current DOM node's content instead of the TYPO3CR Node's.

Instead of getting the HTML source from the actual dom we should get it from the VIE entity instead.

How to trigger this bug?

Add two HTML-Content-Elements (requires Bugfix 24168 for typo3.neos):

```

Hello World

```

This one is changed.

and afterwards

```
This one changes
```

```
<script type="text/javascript">
```

```
setInterval(_onTick, 1000);

function _onTick() {
    $('#myfunnydiv').html(new Date().getTime());
}

</script>
```

Now try to edit the first one using the HTML-Editor. If it works, refresh the page and try again.

NOTE: In the above example the interval is started multiple times if the content area is reloaded. Reloading the whole page discards the additional intervals. If the creation of intervals, ... in inline java script in html content elements shall be fully supported, might be worth some discussion.
