[FEATURE] Improve usability for BE database thumbnails/file icons

The backend produces thumbnails/file icons/truetype font previews which come from a database row. The usability for these images can be improved by showing the file name or title on hover using the title attribute. Currently only the thumbnail/icon is produced and more information can only be read by clicking the icon or opening the record, like in the content element File Links.

This patch changes the alt attribute to the alternative text and adds the title attribute for these images. When no title has been given for a file record, the file name will be used instead.

The screenshot seems reduced and I don't see anything on it.
Can you make a better screenshot? And which TYPO3 6.0 Version are you using?

This is a matter of personal preference. For some people the visual information like a thumbnail says more than a file name.

You can click on each thumbnail or icon to get more information about that particular file. It will open in a popup.

However, it might be an idea to have the file name in the "title" attribute of the thumbnail/icon. It is already in the "alt" attribute, but most browsers don't show this nowadays (which is good). When hovering the thumbnail, it will show the content of this "title" attribute, like "Filename: YourPicture.jpg". It makes no sense to have the file name in the "alt" attribute.

IMHO the best solution would be to have the FAL title in the title attribute and the FAL alternative text in the alt attribute. When the title in FAL is empty, it defaults to the file name anyway.

Reopened since the change has been reverted in master due to a fatal error:

File::getAlternative() was used, which does not exist...

Maybe somebody wants to give it a try with File::getProperty('alternative')?

Could still be tackled, if a stable replacement is reviewed before beta2. I guess the changes from the original reverted patch are not so huge.
