[TASK] Remove minimum stability setting

This removes the minimum-stability so tagged releases of dependencies are used. For doctrine/migrations it explicitly allows dev versions, because no suitable stable release exists.

The packages that are part of TYPO3 Flow directly (Flow, Fluid, Party, Welcome, Kickstart, BuildEssentials) are explicitly allowed in beta state.

This change speeds up installation (because zip archives will be used instead of git clones) and avoids surprises due to possibly unstable code being pulled in.

[TASK] Removed minimum stability setting

This removes the minimum-stability so tagged releases of dependencies are used. It explicitly allows dev versions for typo3/fluid, typo3/party (because we want to use them as dev-master) and doctrine/migrations (because no suitable stable release exists).

This change speeds up installation (because zip archives will be used instead of git clones) and avoids surprises due to possibly unstable 3rd party code being pulled in.

[TASK] Adjust dependencies to doctrine packages

This changes the dependencies to doctrine/migrations (so it explicitly points to dev-master) and doctrine/data-fixtures (so it becomes a suggestion instead of a requirement).

[TASK] Adjust dependencies to doctrine packages

This changes the dependencies to migrations and data-fixtures so they explicitly point to dev versions. This allows to set the global minimum stability to something lower than dev.
