Subject:	Deprecate base tag

Description

Currently the UriBuilder creates relative URLs in the form landing-page/sub-page.html by default.
This requires the presence of a <base /> tag in the HTML head in order to be resolved correctly when the browser is currently on a page other than the homepage.

By prefixing relative URLs with the script request path the base tag would no longer be required.

In general we should think about creating absolute URLs by default (see http://yoast.com/relative-urls-issues/)

[!!!][FEATURE] Deprecated base tag

Currently the ``UriBuilder`` creates relative URLs with relative paths in the form "some/path.html" by default.
This change adjusts the ``UriBuilder`` to prefix URLs with the scripts request path (usually "/" or "/document-root/").

This makes the ``<base />`` tag redundant for most scenarios, even when working with relative URLs.

This is not a breaking change per se, because using the base tag doesn't break the behavior. But it has an impact on all relative URLs created by the ``UriBuilder``.

If you expect the rendered HTML to contain URLs in the form
"some/path.html" (that is: without leading slash) you might need to adjust your code or set the compatibilty flag that is introduced with this change::
    TYPO3:
      Flow:
        compatibility:
          uriBuilder:
            createRelativePaths: TRUE

NOTE: This flag will be deprecated with version 2.2 and removed with version 3.0 of Flow. It's recommended to adjust your code so that it does not rely on the generated URLs
