Subject:	Default upload folder not accessible for editors

Description

The default folder of a storage is currently not available for normal editors by default.

A filemount to the folder is required, otherwise the user will get an error that the folder is not accessible.

Is this desired behavior. Or should the default folder automatically be added to the isWithinFileMountBoundaries check in the ResourceStorage?

[BUGFIX] Prevent permission Exception in ElementBrowser

To prevent Exceptions in the ElementBrowser resource Exceptions are catched in two places:

The Exception is catched in the ElementBrowser itsself when the previously selected folder is not accessible.

Additionally the Exception is cached in the getDefaultUploadFolder() method in BackendUserAuthentication when the default folder of a storage is not accessible.

This is specially a problem in the ElementBrowser. If the user did not access a folder before, the default folder is used as initial expanded folder.

If the user does not have access to it, the ElementBrowser will show an Exception "You are not allowed to access the given folder".

Imo this should be handled. Maybe just catch the exeption so the element browser is still shown.
