Subject:	Remove "tt_content >" from SYSEXT: css_styled_content
Description
It would be preferable to not have that rude approach in a system extension (please enlighten me if this is definetely necessary). I'd like to pre-set some config-options in the tt_content namespace before the EXT is loaded. The part <pre># # tt_content is started # tt_content &gt;</pre> in setup.txt obviously interereres with that.

I am not sure, but I think to ensure that nothing was set before, also for a stable system, it is not wrong to clean tt_content at this position.

- Target version changed from next-patchlevel to 7.2 (Frontend)

- Status changed from New to Rejected

This is necessary. It is not about being rude, but about have a clean and proper way of making sure that CSS styled content behaves exactly as it should be - without side effects, and not allowing integrators mess around with it. Ideally, if you need CSS Styled Content (or parts of it), you should copy these parts into your own extension.
